Sermon Questions

Have you ever been at the funeral of someone who is not a believer and/or only carries a nominal Christian belief left over from their past, what did they reach for in the face of death? Did they smuggle in beliefs from another system/forgotten system to help them through it? What does this tell us about the durability of their belief system?

What makes the hope of Christianity distinct/different from the hopes offered in other belief systems?

A) in terms of substance offered?

B) in terms of means attained?

What do you think of the claim that the hope offered in Christianity is the most durable in the face of all suffering, the most emotionally satisfying, the most intellectually robust, and the most widely available of all hopes? Please explain.
